This combines the look and feel of the Scotty Cameron I use at the moment, with the alignment of a mallet. It feels well made, and the yellow and black colours go well together without being distracting. I feel very confident with it behind the ball.

It's nice and positive off the face and I really like the way this putter feels balanced through the stroke, it feels like it's behaving itself without deviating off line. I like the traditional look it has and find it very forgiving.

The two yellow lines help get the ball in the centre of the putter and I find it so easy to line up. The milled face puts a good roll on the ball, and the lack of an insert gives me a direct feedback on how I am putting. A good, solid putter.

The SAM lab backed Jason's own feelings about the Hummer and highly recommended it to him over all the other models. Of the four models, the Hummer was most consistent for three of the four testers.
